

Ann Pegelow Kaplan

Principal

Ann Pegelow Kaplan brings a diverse and proven set of skills and experiences to our clients. Her background includes museum curation and program development, grant writing and making, non-profit administration, and strategic planning. Focused on setting and achieving project and organizational goals, Ann is often described as a holistic researcher, planner, and project manager. She brings people together around challenges to form creative solutions.

Ann has completed graduate and undergraduate work in oral history, folklore, and anthropology. Starting out with the Smithsonian Center for Folklife and Cultural Heritage, her career has ranged from work as an independent documentarian, organizer of statewide arts conferences, and director of the Orange County Arts Commission. Most recently she has served as a humanities funding specialist for Duke University and as curator for the North Carolina Museum of History.

Throughout her career, Ann has specialized in expressive culture and empowering communities to document and present their own valuable resources.
